

Foreword

We love to drive, don't we?

To the supermarket or post office, to school with our children, to our job, to lunch, to our vacation at the beach or mountains, and to a million places in between, we get in the car, buckle up and hit the road every day.

There are many responsibilities related to that privilege, but none more important than the environmental impact of driving. And, if you are a do-it-yourselfer (DIYer), that is you change your own oil, nothing is more important than the proper management or recycling of that oil.

The potential harm improperly disposed used oil may cause is staggering. It takes only one gallon of used oil to potentially contaminate 1 million gallons of fresh water – enough to supply 50 people with drinking water for one year.

The American Petroleum Institute estimates that nationwide millions of gallons of used oil are improperly disposed of each year. There's good – no great - news in South Carolina. The state has developed one of the nation's best and most comprehensive recycling programs targeting DIYers. Consider this: DIYers in South Carolina recycled more than 1 million gallons of used oil in 2001 and nearly 8 million gallons since 1990.

South Carolina's program is successful for a variety of reasons. Grant funding provided by the S.C. Department of Health and Environmental Control's Office of Solid Waste Reduction and Recycling (Office) helped set up and maintain a statewide infrastructure for DIYers. Educational efforts including the public service announcements starring the Recycle Guys and unique programs targeting high school driver education classes let students know the environmental consequences of improper disposal of used oil. And Santee Cooper, the state owned electric utility, picks up the used oil at many recycling centers throughout the state and uses it to reduce the amount of coal they use to make electricity.

Why should I recycle?

Recycling used oil is one way that you can demonstrate your commitment to protect the environment for future generations while conserving energy resources.

Here are specific projects the Office developed and/or offered in 2001:

- developed and released a nationally recognized, award-winning television campaign featuring an animated Motor Oil Guy as part of the “Recycle Guys”, to television stations around the state to promote the importance of used oil recycling;
- distributed static service stickers to DIYers around the state, reminding them to call DHEC’s recycling hot line for the location of the nearest used oil recycling center;
- distributed oil bottle drain racks to counties to set up at the recycling centers for DIYers to use to drain the last bit of motor oil from the bottles so that the motor oil bottles can be collected with other plastic bottles;
- continued efforts on establishing oil recycling sites for small farmers in partnership with local governments;
- continued developing the “Green Driver Project” that targets students in high school driver education classes with information on the recycling of used oil, filters and bottles, gasoline conservation and other environmental tips. Presentations were made to more than 5,800 students in 84 classrooms;
- awarded grants to local governments and schools to set up recycling programs and education programs with an emphasis on used oil, filters and bottles;
- helped to set up oil/gas mixture collection containers at the recycling centers throughout the state;
- made numerous presentations to schools, civic groups and local governments.

These public awareness efforts are working. The used oil collection and recycling efforts in South Carolina represent one of the top used oil collection programs in the nation. The amount of used oil collected in the state from DIYers has increased every year since 1991. In addition, South Carolina is among the first to offer “full service” recycling centers, collecting used oil filters and bottles alongside used oil.

What are the benefits of recycling?

Recycling keeps used motor oil from rivers, streams or lakes.
Recycling saves energy and is a valuable resource.

Purpose

In accordance with Section 44-96-160 of the S.C. Solid Waste Policy and Management Act of 1991 (Act), the purpose of this report is to:

1. provide the number of used oil recycling sites available to the public in each county;
2. provide the number and location of used oil recycling sites in each county receiving grant funding assistance from DHEC's Office of Solid Waste Reduction and Recycling;
3. provide the amount of used oil collected from the public.

Recycling Used Oil is Mandatory in South Carolina

As a result of the Act, it is illegal to dispose of used oil in county and municipal landfills. In addition, according to the Pollution Control Act, it is illegal to dump used oil on the ground or in waterways. Violation of either of these laws can result in fines up to $200 to $10,000, respectively. To help DIYers properly dispose of used motor oil, the state has implemented a used oil grant program through DHEC that helps local governments establish collection programs for their residents.

Used Oil Regulation

Nationally, a Used Oil Regulation became effective on July 28, 1995. The regulation was drafted from the U.S. EPA's rule found in 40 CFR 279. The South Carolina version of the regulation varies slightly from the federal rule. Statutory authority for the regulation is found in Section 44-96-160 of the S.C. Code of Laws, 1976.

The S.C. Used Oil Regulation (61-107.279) replaces the used oil reference in R.61-79.266 and 267, with the exception of the mixture rule regarding characteristic hazardous waste.

Used oil in South Carolina is regulated as a solid waste unless the used oil has exceeded the allowable halogen limits as a result of mixing with hazardous waste. Mixing of used oil with a hazardous waste is not allowed under South Carolina hazardous waste regulation.

Any handler of used oil engaged in multiple activities (i.e., generating, transporting and marketing) must comply with all applicable provisions of the regulation. South Carolina requires all owners and operators of used oil processing, re-refining, off-specification burning and marketing facilities to obtain a permit from DHEC. Used oil recycling centers, aggregation points, transporters and transfer facilities must register with DHEC. All facilities are required to follow certain reporting and record keeping requirements.

Number of Used Oil Recycling Sites

By the end of the 2001 calendar year, South Carolina had more than 650 used oil collection sites available for DIYers. More than half the sites were established through DHEC's grant program. In addition to publicly owned sites, Advance Auto Parts and Auto Zone stores as well as other oil change locations accept used oil from DIYers. All sites accepting used oil from the public must be registered with DHEC as a collector in compliance with the Used Oil Regulation. Once these sites are registered, they are listed by county in the S.C. Recycles: A Directory of Recycling Programs. A listing of the oil recycling sites throughout the state is provided on pages 15 – 33.

Gallons Collected

In 2001, DIYers recycled 1,147,500 gallons of used oil at the more than 650 locations throughout South Carolina. Since the beginning of used oil collection in 1990, DIYers in South Carolina have recycled more than 7.9 million gallons of used oil. The 10 counties that collected the most oil in 2001 were Aiken, Anderson, Berkeley, Dorchester, Greenville, Horry, Lexington, Richland, Spartanburg and York. Please see the graph on page five for an illustration of the growth of the state's oil collection program.

According to the South Carolina Department of Motor Vehicles, there are 2,270,914 automobiles registered in the state.

Used Oil Filters

Used oil filters are banned from landfill disposal in South Carolina unless they have been hot drained or compacted to their smallest practical volume. The fact that each filter may contain from four ounces to one quart of used oil makes them an excellent target for recycling programs seeking to expand their list of accepted recyclables.

The used oil filter recycling program began in 1994 and has seen exceptional growth over the past seven years. The program began with three counties collecting filters; the number has increased to 35 counties in 2001. With the increase in the number of counties collecting used oil filters for recycling, so has the amount of filters, from 45,082 filters in 1994 to 374,110 filters (245 tons) in 2001. The five counties that collected the most oil filters in 2001 were Berkeley, Cherokee, Jasper, Lexington and Spartanburg.

How much used oil gets recycled?

In a recent study by API, it was estimated that quick lube shops, retailers and do-it-yourselfers recycled between 240 and 259 million gallons of used oil in 1997. It is estimated that DIYers recycled between 43 and 62 million gallons.

Used Oil Bottles

South Carolina is one of the first states in the nation to target oil bottle recycling. Because oil bottles can contain up to an ounce of oil in each container and are made from recyclable #2 plastic (HDPE), the state established a program to capture the bottles before they went into a landfill.

The program began in 1995 when Lexington and Charleston counties participated in an oil bottle recycling project. Based on the response and results of the collection program, other counties have expanded their programs to include the oil bottles. Seven years later, the pilot project grew into a successful ongoing program with 31 counties collecting bottles.

DIYers must be educated about the importance of completely draining bottles to make them acceptable in the recycling system. At the end of an oil change, the bottles typically contain about an ounce of oil. If the bottle is not thoroughly drained it could contaminate other bottles collected for recycling. One emphasis of the program in 2001 was to continue to provide drain racks at drop-off recycling centers for draining up to 50 bottles at one time as well as distributing DIYer home drain racks. Counties are now using oil bottle drain racks to drain the ounce of oil that is left in the bottle. Once drained, the clean oil bottles can be mixed with other pigmented HDPE plastics.

Collected motor oil bottles are recycled into non-food items such as flower pots, pallets and other items. South Carolina continues to be a leader in its expansion of the used oil recycling program with the establishment of an oil bottle collection system, a plastic traditionally left out of the system due to the potential contamination of oil.

In 2001, the counties collected over 100 tons of used oil bottles, a 10 ton decrease from last year. One possible reason for this decrease is that some counties are collecting and marketing used oil bottles with other pigmented HDPE plastic. As a result, a portion of the used oil bottles that are being recycled are being counted in the HDPE plastic rather than the used oil bottle numbers. From 2000 to 2001, the amount of HDPE plastic being recycled increased by over 265 tons. Another possible reason for the decrease could be that the City of North Augusta has stopped processing oil bottles because of operational issues. The top five counties that collected motor oil bottles in 2001 were Aiken, Lexington, Oconee, Spartanburg and York.

Farmer Oil

According to South Carolina Solid Waste Management Regulation 61-107.279, farmers are considered small quantity generators of used oil and, as a result, must follow certain management practices.

- Farmers who generate more than 25 gallons of used oil in a month are required to store the used oil in a container with no leaks or visible rusting.

- The container must be labeled “Used Oil.” Used oil generated from farm machinery is not considered DIY used oil and may not be disposed of in DIY collection tanks.
- Farmers who transport more than 55 gallons of used oil at any time are required to register with DHEC.

Farmers who generate an average of 25 gallons of used oil per month or less from vehicles or machinery used on the farm in a calendar year are not subject to the requirements of this regulation but should follow best management standards and practices in handling used oil.

Each agricultural oil tank holds at least 550 gallons of used oil and is fitted with a pump and hose in an effort to make it easier for farmers to deliver up to 55 gallons of used oil at one time. There are 13 farmer oil sites in the state since the farmer oil program started in 1998. The sites are in the following counties: Fairfield, Georgetown, Greenville, Greenwood, Hampton, Lee, Newberry, Oconee, Pickens, Sumter and Williamsburg.

Oil/Gas Mixture

South Carolina continues to expand the used oil recycling program by adding oil/gas mixture collection tanks to the county programs. The oil/gas mixture tanks are serviced by Santee Cooper, as are the agricultural oil tanks and DIYers tanks.

There are four oil/gas mixture collection tanks in the state. The tanks are located in the following counties: Charleston, Greenville, Hampton and Lexington.

Grant Assistance

As of January 1, 2002, the Office had provided or committed an nine-year total of $8,921,990.97 to local governments for the establishment of:

- used oil recycling sites;
- curbside oil collection programs;
- used oil filter collection programs;
- motor oil bottle collection programs;
- oil/gas mixture programs;
- farmer oil collection sites;
- oil drain racks for county; and
- the establishment of public education programs.

The Office also provided counties with technical assistance and public education materials, including brochures, static service stickers, DIYers oil bottle drain racks and posters to increase awareness about used oil recycling.

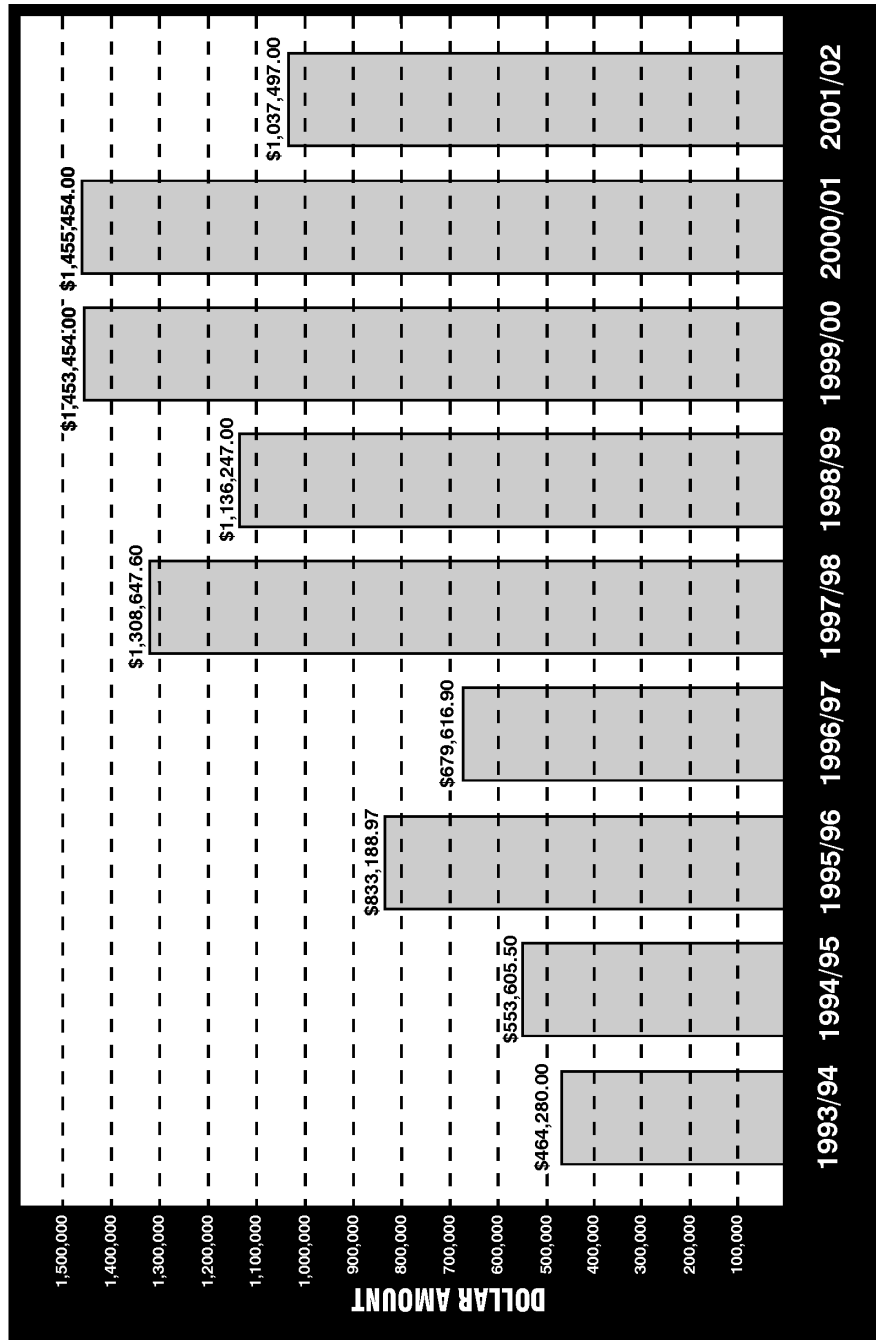

Please see the chart on page 10 for a year-by-year breakdown of grant assistance provided to local governments. The years in the chart refer to fiscal years beginning with 1993-1994 through 2001-2002. A brief summary of individual grants is available on pages 11 – 14.

Conclusion

While DHEC's Office of Solid Waste Reduction and Recycling is proud of the success of this state's oil recycling efforts and fully expects collection of used oil, filters and bottles to continue to increase, improper disposal of this valuable resource still presents a serious threat to our state's public health, environment and economic stability. South Carolina must continue to promote the proper handling of used motor oil and its related products to ensure the quality of life South Carolinians have come to expect.

What is recycled motor oil used for?

Used motor oil can be reprocessed into fuel used in furnaces for heat or in power plants to generate electricity for homes, schools and businesses. It can also be used in industrial and utility boilers, mixed with asphalt and blended with marine fuels. Used motor oil can also be re-refined into lubricating oils that meet the same API/SAE specifications as virgin motor oil.
